

INSIDE: NEW LOOK! ★ NEW COLUMNISTS! ★ MORE CHOICES!

LONDON / ANGLIA
MIDLANDS

radiotimes.com

18-24 April 2009 £1.10

Radiotimes

FREE FOR EVERY READER: A DOCTOR WHO EPISODE ON iTUNES!

INSIDE:

Ian Hislop
Marianne Faithfull
Louis Theroux
Omid Djalili

+ Win tickets to the TV Baftas!

Keeley Hawes and
Philip Glenister return in
Ashes to Ashes,
Monday BBC1

Back to the 80s!

Take our nostalgic trip, starting on p12...

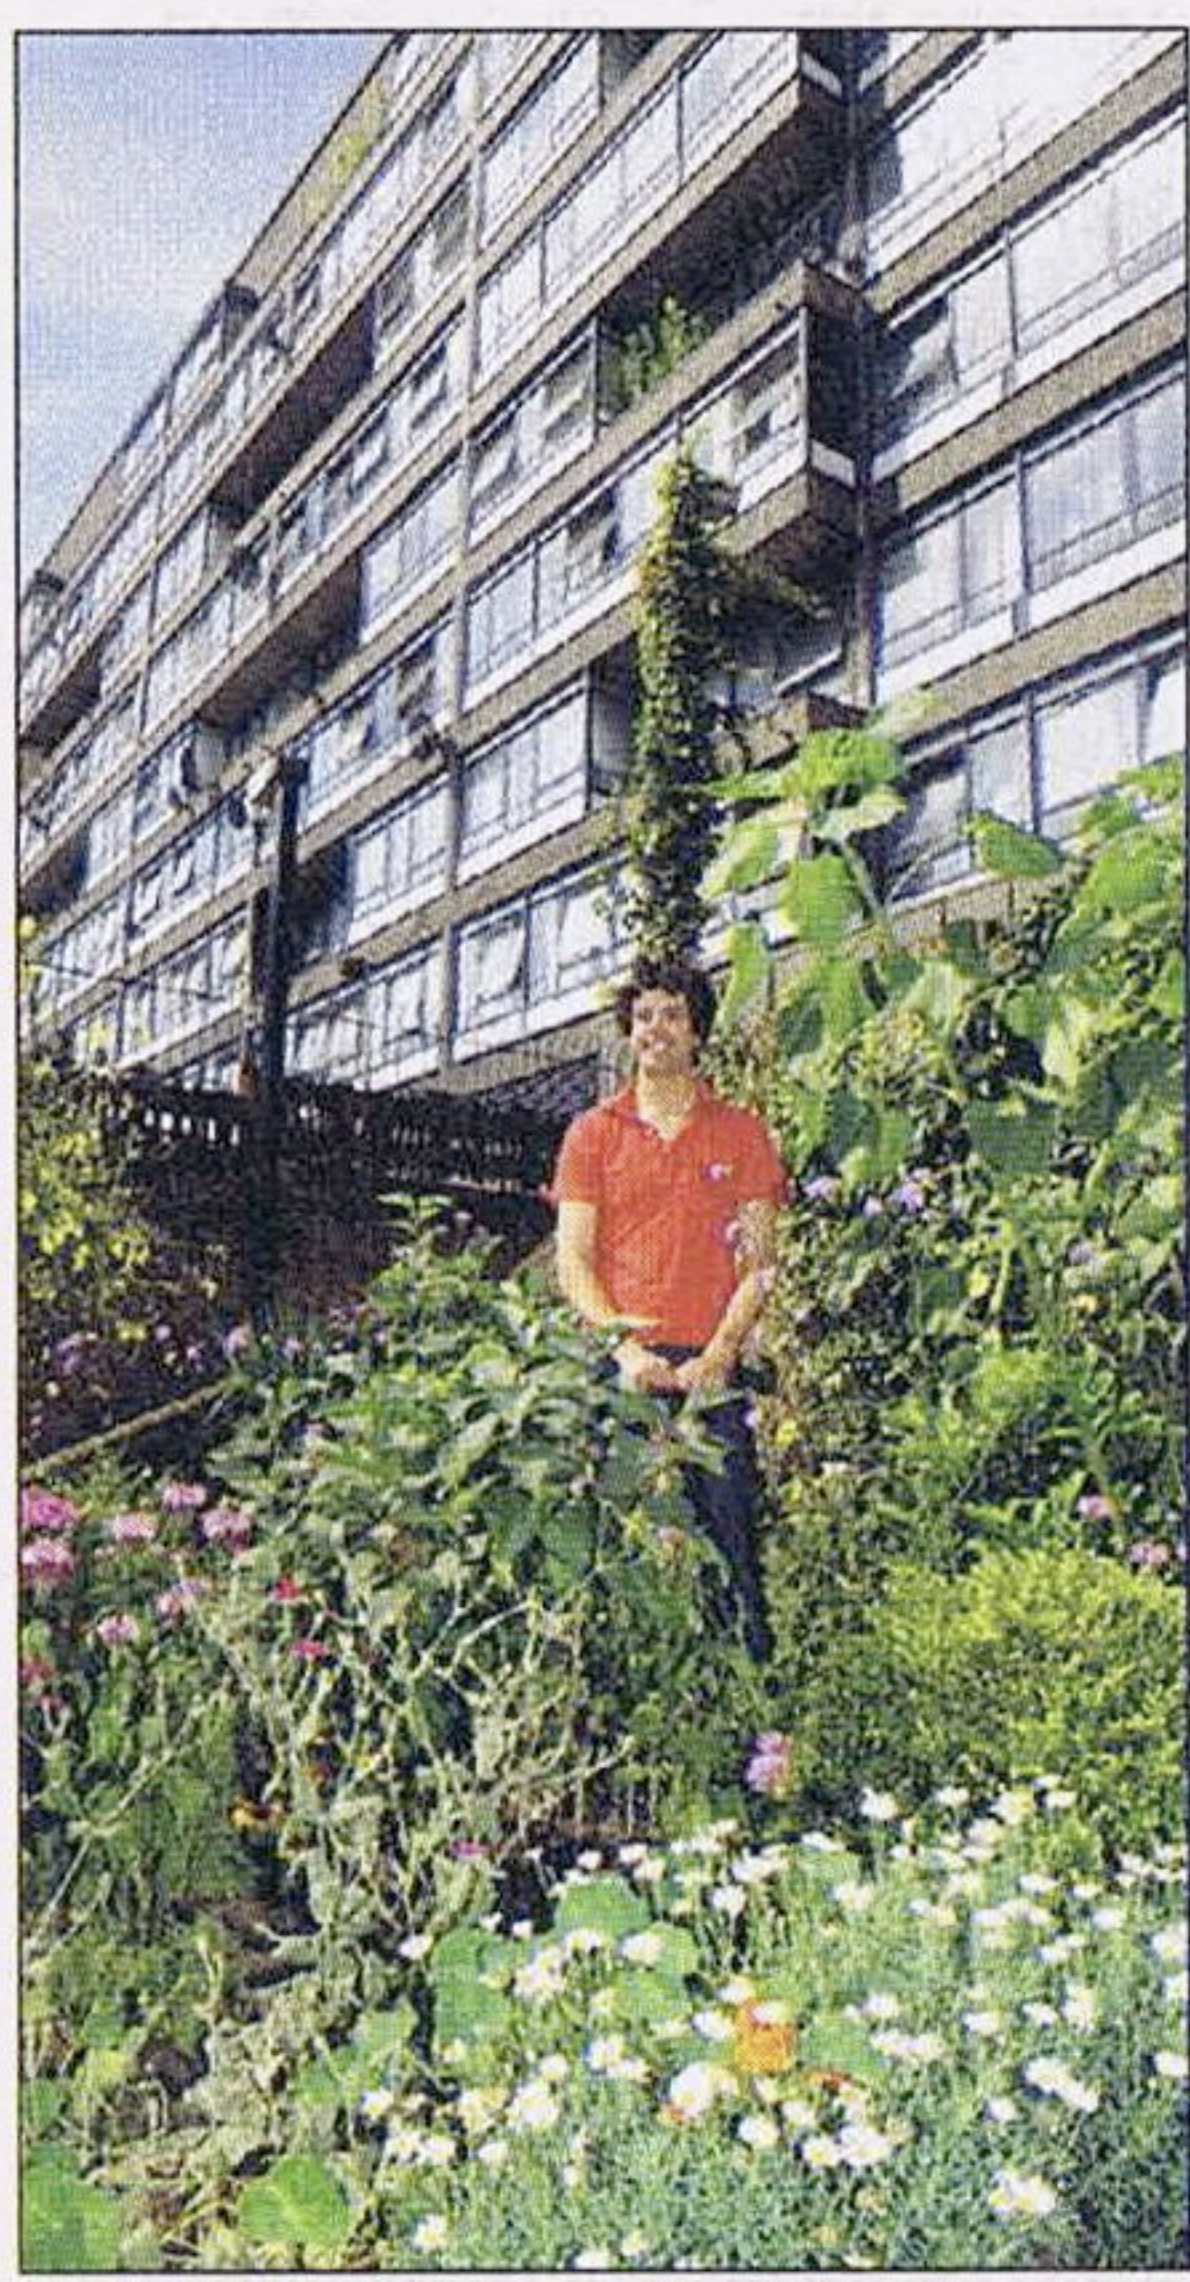

PLUS Reggie Perrin

Martin Clunes re-creates a TV classic - but how close to the original will it be?

Monday

Today's Choices

Night Waves

9.15pm Radio 3

A strip of dirt beside a busy roundabout at London's Elephant and Castle would not be most people's first choice of location to plant a row of lettuces. But then most people aren't Richard Reynolds (above), the figurehead of "guerrilla gardening" in the UK. "Guerrilla gardening" may conjure up an image of balaclava-clad bandits lurking in herbaceous borders, brandishing secateurs menacingly, but the affable Reynolds dispels all such thoughts as he explains his mission to bring plant life to neglected urban spaces. He argues that guerrilla gardening is a political act, a form of non-violent direct action – much of his planting is viewed in British law as criminal damage – with its roots in the Digger radicals of the 17th century. By the end of his inspirational talk you'll be planning a night-time trip to the nearest verge, armed with trowel and seeds. David Crawford